A feature of the Memorial Day program not announced in last week's issue of the Citizen was the appearance of the drum corps of George A. Mundt Post, American Legion, in the parade here and at Newry Corner. Herbert R. AYNARD WHITE CANDIDATE FOR NEW YORK NINE

Many local people will be interested in the following clipping from a Massachusetts newspaper.

White spent several summers town with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. William Lowe, and played the town baseball team.

Maynard White, former Haverhill High School athlete, is a candidate for the baseball team at New York University.

Maynie has just completed a season with the undefeated N. Y. basketball team. He played uniformly and saw action in nearly every game.

Now, the former Haverhill High School and Dean Academy star is for pitcher. Maynie was a four term here and did some twirling.

He is now a senior at N. Y. U. and has a commendable record in athletics and studies. He played regular end on the varsity football team two years and won recognition for his ability to be a forward pass.

BETHEL TEAM OPENS SEASON WITH A WIN

Bethel opened its baseball season here last Sunday by taking the fast Wild River C. C. C. team into camp to the tune of 9-2. Quimby, who allowed only five hits, was in great form and got out of the tight places like a veteran while the hitting of Hood, who connected safely every time at the plate among which were three two-base hits, was the offensive star. For the Wild River team, Brusso pitched good ball allowing only eleven hits and striking out eight men.

June 4—Paris at Bethel.
June 10—Rumford Garage at Bethel.

June 13—Oxford Mill Team at Bethel.

BETHEL 12—WEST PARIS 9

Bethel tripped up West Paris Wednesday to the tune of 12-9 at Riverside Park. Scribner and Whitman did a good job on the mound while Robertson, who garnered two doubles and a single in five times up, and Allen, who made two nice catches in the field, were the brighter stars for Bethel. Myers filling in at second, Austin at first and Bartlett catching gave a very creditable account of themselves.

Young made some nice plays at shortstop and Robertson made a spectacular catch of Herrick's hot liner. For West Paris, Waterhouse and Packard did a great job at bat and in the field. Following is the lineup and box score.

Please watch for more details in next week's Citizen.

HERE AND THERE IN MAINE

Farming requires more horse power of energy than all manufacturing and mining operations combined. Plowing requires about three billion horse power hours annually, or one third of the total.

WITH THE POETS

To Our Readers—If there is an old song or poem which you cannot find and would like to see in print, write the Citizen. If we are unable to locate it possibly another reader can furnish it for publication.

WHAT DOES IT MEAN TO YOU?

What does it mean, this marching past Of a few old men who are bent and grave?
You have heard of the host that was proud and vast And you see the banners that brightly wave;
You have heard men glibly extol the brave Who endeared the Gray and honored the Blue,
You have heard of the cause that was lost and won,
But what is the lesson you teach your son,
and what is the meaning of this to you?

What does it mean, this trudging by
Of a few old men who will cease ere long to march to the graves where their comrades lie
Or to hear the cheers of the careless throng?
But what is the lesson your son has learned,
and what is the meaning of this to
you?

They offered all that the brave may give Where the selfish prey and the timid pause;
Or to them than the right to live
Was the right to die in their country's cause!
The crowd is granting them its applause, thinking that thus they receive their due;
They have given much and have not complained,
but what is the lesson your son has gained,
and what is the meaning to you?

RESPONSIBILITY

Lurana Sheldon

Your burden is your own to bear, alike it not on others, friend!
If you have good luck to share—less your gift will lighten care—ought should you give "and nothing lend.

Your sorrow is your own, my friend;
Remember woe lies at each door, to help and comfort with it blend,
Breathe of sadness should you send make one trace of shadow more.

Life is yours to live, my friends, Pain be yours, be brave, be true;
If your blessings freely lend;
Joy with other joys pray blend.

Let your troubles die with
you!

A REGRET

(Washington Star)

Worked just seven days a week, couldn't work much more.
He made a bunk beneath
counter in the store.
He saved his pennies up, dreamed of future bliss.
"I am rich," said he, "I'll go through hardships, such as this."

When he had attained great wealth turned to criticize,< Allegiance declared that he neither good nor wise.
Showed unpleasant pictures features in the press, told in various ways to fill life with bitterness.

When the prize which he had won feelings of dismay, he called at his attempts for the stuff away.
Through sleepless nights he aged for days of yore he was lost in dreams beneath
counter in the store.

Vitamins B and G

Although vitamins B and G occur in a wide variety of foods in relatively small amounts, only a few concentrated sources are known.

The germ and seed coat of wheat grains are among the most important of these. Since the germ tends to become rancid and the bran detracts from the appearance of the product, when the grain is milled these parts are generally removed and used for animal feeds. Often the food constituents lost in this way are the very ones lacking in the diets of those who use large quantities of highly milled grains and prepared cereals.

"Twice as Cold as Zero"

The expression "twice as cold" or "twice as hot" refers entirely to the discomfort of the individual, and even then are only rough comparisons of the state of one's feelings that depend on more things than temperature. "Twice as cold," and other similar expressions, cannot, therefore, be evaluated in terms of the reading of the thermometer, and have no scientific meaning.

ALL SIDES SHOULD BE FAIR

During the last few months there has been growing criticism, from many quarters, of various governmental activities—particularly those which are of an experimental nature, and are without legislative precedent. And, in return, the defenders of experiments have naturally been more zealous and aggressive in bringing their beliefs and arguments before the public.

A grave responsibility rests on both these groups: those who defend and those who criticize. The American government is attempting to do a great and fine thing to bring more happiness, more opportunity, more useful leisure to the average man. There is no place for criticism and denunciation which is purely partisan and selfish, and represents an effort of those who are politically "out" to get themselves back "in." And there is no place for enthusiastic praise which is likewise based on partisan grounds and represents unbridled loyalty to a political group.

There is unquestionably fear on the part of many citizens that in conducting its experiments, the government is being right of certain American fundamentals—that it is endangering the existence of economic and social individualism, that it is weakening the foundations of democracy. There is fear that we are nearing the shores of fascism, and bureaucratic dictatorship. That is the issue that the friends and enemies of the new must be widely discussed, by both order. It should be discussed frankly, fairly and authoritatively, and all sides should be heard.

Neither dogmatic praise nor partisan criticism does service to a government, an administration, or to the public. Honest differences of opinion, honestly argued and thrashed out, are of immense benefit.

MAKING A RECORD

Life insurance statistics are becoming constantly more encouraging.

One of the latest reports issued by the Association of Life Insurance Companies shows that during the last quarter of the year sales of all life insurance increased 21.5 per cent.

Indemnity life rose 8 per cent, industrial 100 per cent, and group 67.5 per cent. In March, the third month and to the gain in industrial life was 27 per cent.

That is a record in which the life insurance industry can be proud. It is evidence a record of which the general public can be proud. These times a life insurance policy to add it means that someone had not only protected himself and his dependents against individual misfortune, but that he has literally put a brick in a wall to stop future depression. It has been said that a thoroughly insured people would be immune to business and depression, and economic upheavals. And the past four years in which life insurance money has been the sole means of saving thousands from want and privation, amply demonstrates the truth of that.

He's Been Doing This for Years

ARE YOU A SAFE DRIVER?

Summer isn't far away when the streets and highways of the nation will be crowded with traffic. Fine dry weather will bring out thousands of motorists—and roads will again resound to the roar of motors.

Now is the time to ask yourself if you are a safe driver—and don't answer too hurriedly. You can give yourself a little quiz that will help. Are you thoroughly conversant with the driving laws of your state? Do you adapt the speed at which you drive, to local conditions—in other words, are you aware that 20 miles an hour is dangerously fast at times, and slow at others? Do you stick to your side of the road, and make certain that you can stop, under any circumstances in the assured clear-distance ahead? Are you careful not to pass on hills and curves?

Other questions of that kind will suggest themselves to you. But even if such a test, honestly answered, puts you in the safe driving status, you aren't through.
How about your car? When were the tires, the brakes, the steering, the lights, last inspected by a good mechanic? A substantial per centage of motorists put off repairs till tomorrow—and sometimes that tomorrow never comes.

Last year was one of the worst in the history of the automobile as far as needless sacrifice of life and property was concerned. Every motorist should give himself a safe driving test now—and if he is uncertain as to how to do it, traffic departments and safety organizations exist to help him.
Bring accidents down in 1934.

Fox Hound's Fine Sense of Smell Puzzles Hunter

A mystery to all hunters is how a hound, striking the track of a fox in the night, can determine in which direction the fox was running, but any good fox hound can do that and do it unerringly. It is not by any imprint of the fox's paws upon the ground, for a fox hound will unravel that mystery when the ground is frozen and when not even a microscope could find the trace of a track. It is done by the sense of smell, but how? Some contend that the dog noses around on the ground until he locates the position of the four tracks and can tell by their relation to each other in which way the fox was going. Others think the hound has such a fine sense of smell that even an hour after the fox has passed, the hound can distinguish the slight difference in strength of scent between one part of the track, where the fox hit the ground first and remained longest, and the rear part of the track, which touched the earth for the shortest time.

Whatever that mysterious sense may be, a dog, finding a trail, will nose around in it, trusting his nose to first in one invisible track and then in another, making short, quick dashes this way and that along the trail, but soon, as sure as fate, he discovers which way the fox was traveling. Then he points his nose to the sky and utters a long, quivering, bleating cry that comes across the night in triumphant confidence.

SOUTH WOODSTOCK

May 27—The sun rose over the eastern hills in all its splendor, heralding another perfect day.

Mr. and Mrs. "Ned" Herrick were in Lewiston on Monday on a business and pleasure trip.

Ellery Laurance and Miss Richardson of North Norway were Sunday visitors with his mother, Mrs. John Flagg, and family.

Melford Perham and Charles Silver have trucking jobs on the State highway, being now engaged in depositing sand heaps for future use, the sand being purchased in Paris and brought into the town of Woodstock.

Maynard Flemming, a student of Atlantic Union College of South Lancaster, Mass., is visiting at the home of his fiancée, Miss Mary Hendrickson.

Mr. and Mrs. Ted Chase and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Cole of Bryant Pond were Sunday evening callers at Davis homestead.

Mrs. Bernice Davis and daughters, Ethel Mary and Edith Manola, of this place recently visited with the family of her cousin, Mrs. Dorothea Brooks of West Paris.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Cummings and son of Portland were recent visitors of his cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Quimby Perham.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellis Davis of this place, Mr. Davis' uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Dannie Bryant, and cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie Bryant and daughter, June, of Bryant Pond, made up a party for the week end, spending Saturday and Sunday at Harpswell, the summer home of Mr. and Mrs. Alton Bacon.

Schools are drawing to a close. What a relief to have our children all at home again where we can cease worrying over their welfare while absent from the family circle.

The flag of victory hangs triumphantly from the peak of Molly Ockett and the savage war cry echoes down the valley as another battle ends. The camp fires burned late last night and everything was astir early this morning. Spies from neighboring tribes had been reported and at two o'clock a battle ensued. The Braves were in mortal combat with Chief Morris' men of the Androscoggin. The enemy was opposed and driven back to the foothills. "Never give up," Chief Big Gun's admonition, resulted in a victory of 15 to 8 to the honor of the Braves of Molly Ockett.

Guyton G. Davis of this place and Charles Sanborn of Canton, students of State Normal School at Farmington, were callers at the Davis homestead, Saturday night, May 26.

Charles Silver has taken a big job trucking for Penley Bros. Silver is running two trucks. Elsworth Laurance drives one of the trucks.

Sunday night, May 27, the school children of Union School, under the chaperonage of their teacher, Miss Mary Hendrickson, made up a surprise party and traveling by auto and by foot, met near the home of Mrs. Olive Davis, assistant teacher at Union School. With many instructions for its safety, one of the most courageous of the big boys proceeded to hang a nice may basket for Mrs. Davis, who promptly gave chase and with some extra help rounded up the gang, thanking one and all for the lovely remembrance.

On Thursday evening, May 24, a most delightful dinner party was given by Mrs. Velma Davis in honor of the birthday of her husband, Gerald Felt Davis. Mr. and Mrs. Alanson Cummings and daughter Catherine and Mr. and Mrs. Carrol Cummings of West Paris were special guests for the occasion. The dining room, decorated with apple blossoms, the table, graced with tempting food, the center of which bore a beautiful birthday cake made by Mrs. Davis, presented a lovely picture greatly enjoyed by all, especially Gerald.

Another year has rolled away. Again we are reminded that May 30 has been set aside as Memorial Day in remembrance of our Honored Dead. In the little cemetery here at South Woodstock are many graves of soldiers who fought and died for their country in the war of 1861. Some graves are marked by inscriptions having names and dates. There are others without even a marker to show their resting places. Their memory lives as tradition hands their deeds of valor down, but as one by one the older families are passing out even those scant memorial records may fade. Oh, that more time and more government moneys might be spent in the memory of our departed soldiers, whose lives were given that our land might be made a better place to live in, that servitude might be brought within the bonds of decency, that the United States of America, the North, South, East and West might go down in history as the greatest United States of America in the world.

Mr. and Mrs. Amos McKeen and daughter, Lillian, Freeman McKeen and Freeman Winslow attended the Apple Blossom Service at Waterford Flat, Sunday.

Willis Warren and Freeman McKeen have been harrowing for Clint Andrews.

Mr. Thompson and son from Massachusetts spent the week end at Perley McKeen's.

Freda Harrington is visiting her parents at Bethel.

GREEN NEEDLES

CHAPTER XII

ood-by to Paradise Valley.

E bottom had dropped out of e world. The engineers looked each other. Some shrugged, protested. Some doubted their eyes. Mary Brown dug her into the palms of her clenched hands. Denis couldn't fall like this didn't fall—

then Denis was there among Not Denis the dreamer, Denis hard-headed business man. He very white, very resolute, very minded. Now he was telling tersely, in substance, what he busily had told Mary, adding:

re down, but never out. I finish this thing if it finishes My only way out now is the ing plan, which merely means borrowing of a large sum of y to carry us on, the bonds to id off as delayed payments purchasers come in. I'm

However, there are a few jobs

Mary before had seen face. He made no reply.

es there won't be any dan-rs spoke up similarly, and Craig, the eloquent, the spell-

Brown had stood among the silent, trying rather unsucy to keep her heart-sick-rom her eyes. The bottom re dropped out of the world rest of the engineers; for had dropped out of heaven. ng would it be now?

uzzer sounded. She was ed to Denis Craig's office. stood in the center of the looking not at all beaten. like a Nordic god!

Mary shut her eyes against the sweet vision.

"That would be madness, Denny!" she said tightly. It would, wouldn't it, to give the world a chance to say that the promoter had got out of a hole by marrying a rich girl?

"Wonderful madness. We'd move out to Hope of Heaven. And, honey, there are berries on the hills, and game in the canyon, to live upon.
And the proverbial love—"

"Denny, don't!" How could she hold out against him?

"I can't do it, Denny!" Mary cried doggedly.

He looked at her keenly. "Why not?"

"I—I can't tell you."

His eyes narrowed. For a moment there was almost a cynical curve to his lips, almost disillusionment in his eyes.

"I thought we had the same slant on life, Mary."

"There—might be a difference, a little difference," she faltered. Just the difference in slant on a mere million dollars—if that million belonged to Mary Brown.

But Mary's lips curved wistfully as she spoke, and her voice trembled—and Denis Craig recovered his unflinching optimism. "All right, dear," with his old teasing tenderness. "If it still has to be proved to you, we'll prove it. We'll drift along. But, Mary—if you won't be wholly mad, be mad enough for this; stay on as telephone central until we're able to go ahead with the engineering—"

"As—as telephone central!" Mary giggled. She couldn't help it. It was adventure.

"Is it too severe a test of loyalty?" Denis was smiling.

"Look for your answer when you come back from the city!" Mary flashed at him. With that she ran from the office. Would she be Den-ny's telephone central? She'd be his scrub lady if it would keep her near him!

She went back to her map. She'd finish the thing. A few of the boys were at work. But by noon desks were closed, blue-prints, estimates and plans were filed away, drafting tables were bare. There would be no more progress reports.

After lunch she set out for a walk. Anything to dull this restlessness. Not far from the hotel she met Nell Goodenough.

"Going—or staying, Nell?" she cried interestedly.

"Going. But only because I think I should leave what jobs there are to married men."

"Oh!" Mary looked thoughtful, and started on.

"Wait a minute, Mary." Deliberately Nell overtook her. "How," he drawled, "can we finish our race to the top if we're not on the same track? Couldn't we go—together, Mary? Did you ever look up that antonym in your thesaurus?"

Distress welled in Mary's eyes.

"Nell," slowly, "I—did."

"And what did you find?"

"I—I found friendship, Nell; liking, affection, but—"

"That was all?" bravely.

"I couldn't take them all, Nell. I had to select."

His chin was set and steady. His eyes kind and worshipful and disillusioned. "I was afraid the right one was reserved for some one else, Mary," he said quietly. "Well, friendship is something."

"It's—a lot, Nell." She slipped her hand through his arm and walked with him as far as his tent, returning the steady pressure of his fingers on hers, and hurried on down the hill, around the foot of Lone Mountain. She must think. Get rid of the storm of emotion Denis Craig's entreaty had aroused in her, banish the pain of her refusal of dear old Walt-a-Minute. Something very sweet was beneath her anguish, however. Two men wanted her. Rid of her gold ball and chain, two men of the right sort wanted her!

She walked rapidly, and came to the part of the project where the Dorseys and Leighs lived in their new houses on adjoining hills. A group of girls was gathered on the Leighs' veranda. It made Mary think of that day in Foggy Gulch.

"Don caught the one-five," June was saying. "He'll have something in a short time. Are you going to stay, Mary?"

"Mr. Craig told me I might be telephone central," she grinned.

"Good! He ought to take care of a girl. 'Tisn't so bad for a man to be shifted about, and we wives are all used to these uprootings."

Mary made an abrupt escape. It was the only way she could go. It hurt so. They had grown so dear to her, these girls.

As Mary entered the engineering offices, she met the father of the project's first-born. His face was a little tragic. He was so young; and this was the first time he had lost a job.

"Land anything temporary, Fred?" Mary asked.

"No chance," with bravado.

"Come back in five minutes, and there will be," said Mary succinctly.

She went inside, then. She had it out with Hilt and John.

"It's utter nonsense, Mary, for you to leave! If you don't want to take this job, stay on with Creech and me!"

But Mary was adamant. She left a note, finally, for Denis:

"I just couldn't stay, Denis. I'll be at the Palace."

He would write to her there; come to her there. She flew to the packing of her trunk. She thought her heart was breaking. She wasn't going to stilet to Denis through his slump; wasn't going to prove her loyalty to him and the job by being telephone central—she, the daughter of the rich David Brown.

She was on the train. Now it was stopping at Foggy Gulch. How well she remembered that morning, nearly three years ago, when she had stepped off here. Here—here on the platform was Hank Johnson, himself. Of course! He'd have to know who was leaving, wouldn't he?

Mary rushed from the train, to grasp his hand.

"I knew 'twould happen! Just a money-makin' scheme. The kingpin's made his little wad—"

"Mr. Johnson?"

"Wants me to pay cash for my place! I won't do it!"

Mary smiled at him. Accustomed not to demonstrating the contradictory theorem that was Hank Johnson, she wrote the Q. E. D. Hank would pay cash. That would help Denis some.

"Need money, Miss Mary?"

"No."

"If you did—or should—I could lend it to you."

Mary's eyes filled as she turned toward the steps of the train. All their differences were wiped out in this minute.

"But I'd charge you eight per cent!" Hank shouted after her.

It was tough going for Mary Brown the next few minutes. This was what an engineer's life was like. Making friends, like Hank, like the ones to whom she couldn't say good-by, on the project, weathering the ups and downs of life with them for a year or so—and then, having to leave them.

But gradually Mary got herself together. After all, she had the friends. It would be wonderful to leave a trail of them behind her at every project, to cross trails with them again through the years. And she had behind her—achievement.
A background for greater success.
She had one hundred dollars—and the adventure ahead of choosing a new job.

Soon Denis would come to her.
By that time she would have thought of some excuse to give him for her leaving.

To be continued.

Over 700,000 pounds of blueberries were frozen for storage and 500,000 quarts of fresh fruit were shipped to city markets from Maine in 1932.

Only four and one-half per cent of Maine's 39,006 farms are operated by tenants, according to census figures.

GOULD ACADEMY NOTES

The Senior Class sponsored a May Ball in the William Bingham Gymnasium on Friday evening, May 25. The gymnasium was beautifully decorated, and dance music was furnished by Lord's orchestra. Specialties for the evening consisted of an accordion solo by Phyllis Davis, vocal solo by Richard Young, and May Pole dance by six freshman girls and six freshman boys. Patrons and patronesses consisted of Miss Ella Litchfield, Mr. and Mrs. Percy F.
Crane, Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Fossett, and Miss Dorothy Hanscom.
Accompaniments for the specialties were played by Miss Jane Linston.

The Gould track team threw a scare into the Rumford track forces last Saturday in the four-cornered track meet held in Farmington, in which Rumford High School, Gould Academy, Farmington Normal School, and Phillips high school took part. Going into the last event on the broad jump, Gould led Rumford 31½ to 31¼. A foot injury sustained by "Bud" Browne, Gould broad jumper, enabled Rumford to place three men in the final event. The hammer throw and hurdles, Gould's particularly strong events were not included in the list of events for the meet. Stanley Allen copped first place in both the 100 and 220 yard dashes, making especially good time in each event. An outstand-

There were sixty-four present in-

Boats 3000 B. C. Were Constructed of Planks

Shipbuilding, says the Washington Star, is one of the most ancient of the arts. Egyptian drawings, dating probably from about 3000 B. C., show boats constructed of planks, having sails as well as oars. From ancient sculptures it appears that the ships of the Greeks and Romans were propelled by wind and oar and were built with keel, ribs and planking, strengthened crosswise by benches on which the rowers sat. The Phoenicians were probably the most skillful mariners of ancient times, and at a very early period had developed a type of war galley. The Vikings of Norway used ships of considerable strength of frame, but very light draft. The European nations steadily improved in shipbuilding, and the car was gradually superseded by the sail. Larger and speedier vessels were required for the development of commerce. The development of shipbuilding as a science, however, may be said to date from the middle of the nineteenth century and to have been a direct result of the use of iron and steel in ship construction and the application of steam to propulsion.

FOR just two years Betty and Tony had been engaged.

Force of circumstances in the shape of an invalid and absolutely dependent brother had made it impossible for Tony to lay aside enough to justify the assumption of new burdens.

At first they had made plans for a somewhat indefinite future, but of late they had grown—Betty especially—to seize the present and let the days to come take care of themselves.

And then one sunny afternoon when an advance spring breeze perfumed the air they had quarreled.

“Yes, I like you, Tony,” said Betty finally, “only—only I think I am tired of being engaged. Yes, it’s dreadful to say, but how much better to find out before we are married. So here’s your r-r-ring!”

Stupidly, Tony held out his hand for the shining bit of jewelry. “Of course, dear,” he said soberly, “it’s worlds better. I’ll—I’ll try to take it sensibly. Now, let’s go home.”

If, after Tony had left Betty, he wondered if any other man had been the cause of her defection.

To be sure, any girl would have grown weary long ago of this monotonous waiting.

Well, his sole duty now lay with his brother.

As far as Betty was concerned no other man than Tony had ever claimed even one tiny thought.

Yet there was another man in the offing—a tall, sleek, not unattractive youth, who had many times eyed Betty admiringly as they ascended together in the elevator to their respective places of employment. And that man, Bill Evans, was determined to meet Betty. Six days after Betty’s engagement to Tony was broken he accomplished his wish through the agency of a fellow stenographer of Betty’s.

And on the day after he met her, Bill drove her in his small but milky-devouring roadster far up along the Hudson.

There was nothing slow about Bill.

Betty, left at loose ends of her own making, found life far more exciting now than it had been with Tony. Tony’s money had been limited. Bill’s appeared to be ample.

Seats at the latest comedy; supper at the most exclusive little restaurants; hamper plumes on distant beaches; midnight dances at softly lighted, glassy floored dance halls—Betty went the pace and didn’t stop to wonder when—or where—it would all end.

Then came the night of the in-fantry ball, the one annual extravaganza she and Tony had permitted themselves. Bill tossed tickets for it into her lap as they sat together on a grassy bluff overlooking the Sandy Hook panorama.

“Not crazy about it,” said Bill in his blasé way, “but we might as well take it in.”

Other years Betty had not fussed unduly about her clothes. Poor old Tony had thought that whatever she wore outshone the costumes of all the others. Bill, she realized, was considerably more critical. Therefore she drew on her rainy day balance and splurged.

Bill’s flowers were lavish and showy, and Betty couldn’t help but think, not nearly as fragrant as the modest bunch of violets which had always come from Tony. Pining them on, she sighed as she gave a final survey in the mirror. Would Tony ever have recognized, in the sophisticated image which met her gaze, his little Betty?

For some reason or other, nothing went just right. Bill could not dance—at least, not in the starchy, swaying way she had learned to love in Tony. Also, she didn’t care for the silly compliments Bill while perched in her car as he held her rather too closely. Tony never could talk as he danced.

“Well, after all,” thought Betty to herself, “to be dancing with the man who was giving you the time of your young life, and recalling the man you had grown tired of.”

The crisis came at intermission. Half concealed by a screen of curtains, Bill threw his arm around Betty’s shoulder. That instant, Betty knew. Knew that it was Tony and not Bill who could bring happiness.

“Take me home at once, Bill,” she insisted coldly. And Bill, inwardly sneering at the girl who wouldn’t “warm up” as he called it, was forced to acquiesce.

Although the hour was late when Betty found herself at home and alone, it was not too late, she told herself nervously, to find out if Tony was still free—free to become bound again. Quivering, she stood at the telephone.

“Yes—yes—it’s Betty. Oh, Tony, could you come over for five minutes? Something to tell you.”

Fifteen minutes later Tony stood in the doorway, and straightway forgot that a waiting taxi outside was running up a steep record.

All he realized was that Betty was holding out both arms.

“Do you mean that you aren’t tired of me, after all, dear?” Tony wanted to be sure.

“Well,” and Betty dimpled, “I’d rather be tired of you than of anything else Oh, Tony!”

Many Nightshade Types

More than 1,000 varieties of trees, shrubs and herbs termed generally nightshades, have been identified. Mostly they are found in the tropical or semi-tropical regions. They all possess the power in their leaves of inducing sleep, a power which is lost, however, if the leaves are boiled. Among the more common varieties are the woolly nightshade, sometimes called the blittersweet; the deadly nightshade, known as belladonna, and the enchanters’ nightshade, called circæa.

Destructive Tidal Wave*Not Due to Sun or Moon

A tidal wave has nothing to do with the tide, but is caused by one of two or three things: Earthquakes, storms (which may be distant from where the wave is felt), and high winds. A true tidal wave is nothing other than the tide, says an authority in the Kansas City Star.

The tidal wave of science is caused by the slight bulging of ocean waters on opposite sides of the globe, due to the attraction of the moon and the sun. As the earth rotates on its axis the bulge is carried around it and creates the rise and fall of the tide which is so well known to those who live along sea-coasts and which occurs twice a day.

The tidal wave which does the damage to lives and property is not due to any attraction of sun or moon, and, according to the expert, there is nothing mysterious about such waves, even though they occasionally arrive in calm weather. When they occur in times of calm, it is merely because a storm has set up the gigantic wave at some other point, the wave continuing to roll until it breaks over land.

More than 26,000 persons drowned in the wave which followed the eruption in 1883 of the volcano Krakatau in the Straits of Sunda. The wave which followed the eruption probably was the highest ever known. It reached a point on certain hill-sides which was 115 feet above the normal level of the ocean’s surface.

No Such Animal as Unicorn

There was no such animal as a unicorn. It was a fabulous animal mentioned by ancient Greek and Roman authors as a native of India, its body resembling that of a horse, and having one straight horn on the forehead.

Sailors’ Snug Harbor

Capt. Robert Richard Randall established Sailors’ Snug Harbor for worn-out sailors. It was opened August 1, 1833, and today is one of the richest foundations in the United States. Its holdings are said to be valued at more than $30,000,000. An applicant for admission to Sailors’ Snug Harbor must be an aged, decrepit and worn-out sea-faring man, presenting with his application satisfactory proofs of service on seagoing vessels sailing under the United States flag and letters of recommendation as to his good character. The only home of similar character in the United States is the Sailors’ home, Quincy, Mass.

Diocletian’s Palace Is*Survival of Roman Epoch

The first of the great “show places” of the Dalmatian Riviera is Split (Spalato), a town of 80,000 inhabitants. The city has a history running back to the times of the Roman empire. It was the favorite residence of the Emperor Diocletian (himself a Dalmatian by birth), who built a magnificent palace there. This palace, with its baths and temples, is one of the most interesting survivals of the Roman period.

The palace is of rectangular form and is 216 meters long and 179 meters wide. It is entered by three gates, on the north by the Golden Gate (Porta Aurea), on the west by the Iron Gate (Porta Ferræ) and on the east by the Silver Gate (Porta Argentæ). Each of these gates is flanked by two original towers. There was yet another gate on the southern front, leading to the sea, and adorned with 50 columns, part of which is still to be seen. A quadrangular tower defended each corner of the palace.

The most beautiful portion of the building is the open peristyle, still serving as the vestibule of the mausoleum of the great emperor (now the Cathedral) and to the Temple of Jupiter (now the Baptistry). The classic beauty of these buildings and the decorative architecture of the Porta Aurea, the Loggia and the arcade of the southern facade and, last but not least, the marvelous subterranean construction, excite the admiration, not only of tourists, but also of engineers and architects.
